About

- Rachel is an experienced C-suite professional who brings a proven track record in strategic leadership of membership organisations, professional learning programmes and volunteering, not-for-profits and charitable trusts.
- She is incredibly passionate about equitable access to education and career opportunities for all young people. Rachel's background spans a PhD in Microbiology and Biochemistry at The Institute of Food Research UK; a range of business development roles in HEIs and not-for-profits aligned to STEM education and providing impact on young people; and more recently to a series of UK-wide and international C-suite roles focussed on corporate growth and sustainability for the benefit of society.
- She is a member of the Chartered Management Institute and Association for Project Management. Rachel looks forward to bringing her personal and professional expertise to benefit the schools, staff and young people supported by QUEST.
